While narrowing your search for a good fit U.S. university, it is critical to determine how you will fund your studies. Tuition rates and scholarship opportunities vary widely. Create a budget and target universities that have either tuition and/or scholarships that are affordable.

University financial aid: This is the most likely place that international students receive scholarships. Universities may have some or all of the following options available.

- Needs-based aid: scholarships given based on a family's income and assets. 63 universities will meet an international student's full demonstrated need. Seven of these are need-blind during the admissions process, while most are need-aware.

- Merit-based aid: scholarships given based on the student's academic profile, usually with emphasis on grade point average (GPA) and test scores (SAT or ACT).

- Talent-based aid: scholarships given for athletics or the arts. Athletes will need to be recruited by coaches and meet eligibility requirements. Artists will usually need to provide an audition/portfolio.

- Residence-based aid: some universities provide reduced tuition or special scholarships for Canadians or residences of certain Canadian provinces (see back for more details).

- Work-study: aid given to students based on a certain number of work hours that they contribute throughout the school year.

Provincial funding: You can apply for your Canadian province’s student financial aid system which typically includes scholarships and loans.

External scholarships: It is challenging to locate external scholarships provided by private funders that students can apply to in Canada and take to the United States. There are some that exist, but tend to be for small amounts like $500.

Loans: Loans are money that you will need to pay back. You cannot take out a loan in the United States without an American co-signer. You can use Canadian bank loans to study in the USA.
